(b) to (e) Death of children in acute diarrhoeal diseases is due to dehydration as a result of loss of fluids and electrolytes from the body. To reduce the mortality due to acute diarrhoeal diseases, Government of India has launched Oral Rehydration Therapy Programme during 7th Plan and it is being expanded in a phased manner to cover entire country. The programme is being implemented through the Primary Health Care Delivery Services. Training of medical and paramedical personnel has been augmented, infrastructure is improved, production of ORS is augmented, and health education efforts are strengthened.

Emphasis has been laid on providing safe drinking water to all problem villages by 1990 and improvement of basic sanitation by encouragement of construction of low cost sanitary toilets in rural areas with a view to reducing deaths due to above mentioned diseases. 90% of population in urban areas is expected to be provided with safe drinking water and urban sanitation to 50% of the population under the Decade programme by 1990.
